Another picture of Maria's childhood rises vividly before me, sadly suggestive of the real "heathenism" in many and many a so-called Christian home. A hot sum-mer afterneon, the mother, with her little daughter starting off on an expedition to the woods at the back to water the cattle at a sholtered creek; their carness talk by the way on the subject nearest to Maria's "I really do want to be good, mother, but I don't know how," were the words in which the child's longing clothed itself. The mother could only weep. She knew she had no satisfying answer, and the knowledge was acutely painful.

Little Maria's conclusion was the s dest of all. Big people, then, wanted God, and yet could not find him. Oh! the sorrow of the thought was so overwhelming that she cried her poor little eyes out.

The mournful pair went on their way through the forest, reaching at last the booke had found Him, and with Him good-ures and happiness—of all this flarar field to gentryin, which in the buttest westler that had your. What was the minister's text just zow? How the wild will we would be the wild now whole when we seek Him with our whole

Little Maria's search was rewarded just hecause she did seek Him with this conientration of purpose.

The years slipped away, and she was The years supped away, and she was now a tall strapping lass of fitteen, when revival meetings, conducted on Army lines were started in the village. A friend of the family called one ovening to persuade the parents to waive in this instance their strictly enforced rule forbidding the girls to go out after dark. She neceeded the end, and carried off in triumph three older girls, sged respectively eigh ing, in the same little church, "Zion."
Maria's search was ended. She, together with her eleters, knelt at the foot of the cross : they all went home God's pardoo ed children.

About daylırsak the next monoing the parents were startled on socing Maria, her whole face glowing with a wonderful refleeted light from some unecen scorce, rash into their room. She exclaimed joyfully; Ah I we had a grand meeting that night;

An't we not a grand meeting that night; we all got saved."

The father sprear; on, too attended to uttor a word, while the mother's heart gere a quick bound, who can say what varied emotions struggled therelo? Forlage a slight jealous pain a mong others to heer that after all her ouldrom had been to heer that after all her oldforn had been obliged to go out of the beme-nest to gain life's crowning joy. "What ?" she said, "Maggie too?" Maggie was the girl of twelve---"Yes, toother," was Maria's prompt reply, "Maggie to I" Another scamper of horrying feet and Mary and Maygie dashed into the room to senfirm the tale. That evening, the father went to the rod brick church, and returned home a man deeply convicted of sin. Soon after to an deeply convicted or sin. Soon sites the goule mother found har Saviour. A few days later her quiet reticent husband entered shouting with joy into the same great peace. Then followed the convers-ion of one of the sone.

Home-life was now wanderfully obangod, no more cold toorality, no more hard and rugged enough; others, again, had peccestly in forced service to an unknown almost test their original onlines in the God, but a fifs lighted up by God's smila, native thick foliage of the erowded trees reating a union of hearts fread from an beavy the barden. A new mogive was born in savey said.

It coesn't to the strong, bright country-pirl of sighteen, in common with avery other soul entering upon it, God beckened and God impelled, just tha Calvary math of self-sacrifice to the death. To the world it looks dark, sorrowful, ntterly incomprehensible; to the Godhidden sonl, on the contrary, it offers the deepast followship with His senferings. "Who loved us, and gave Himself for ne." It can only be followed "every step of the way" with the Christ spirit within, guid-ing and peholding, and, with the Christpresence without, over-shadowing and drawing on the ecul. "from glory opto glory" throughout eternal ages.

Maria is now a Cadet in a Canodian Training Home. Here is, indeed, a happy, satisfied heart se she there gains daily a deeper insight into her future duties under the wise enpervision of one, whose single aim it is, to help har soldier girls to become "God's everlasting women, women with a deeply everleating purpose to live and to die in His holy war against ein.

Maria can testify to finding the blessed presence of har Lord more real every day to her soul. It is a light in her path and "such strength, just something to upon all the time."
